LISA CAFORA

I have lived in Normandy with my family for more than 20 years. Now that I have more time available, I am keen to get involved in community endeavours and offer my skills and experience to support the Community Shop.

I am a PhD Researcher and teacher at the University of Surrey and Bayes Business School in London where I teach human resource management to business and management undergraduates. I am an organizational psychologist so have skills in both HR and business.

Prior to my return to academia in 2020 I spent around thirty years working in finance directing large strategic programmes of work focussed on operational capability, financial systems and processes, and all things to do with people management. I have been a director or Head of Change at HSBC, IBM, Legal & General and Prudential Insurance.

My only direct retail experience is when I worked for the Royal Mail and I led a programme installing credit card systems in the 350 sorting offices all over the country including the one in Guildford where I personally connected up the machine and trained the staff.

I am a team player and very keen to support this unique venture
